The ethics of education: differentiating academic professionalism from professional professionalism. Although the issue of "ethics" has been considered by most educators to be an inessential and extraneous problem, this thinking has begun to change as schools of education offer courses in the ethics of teaching and learning. In this paper, we argue that the ethics of education should be distinguished from the ethics of professionals working within educational settings. The ethics of education should incorporate a discipline-specific ethics that is addressed to the research and practice of instructional design. An appropriate ethics of education would be one that recognizes the importance of professionals in education, while also helping to strengthen the professionalism of educators. The paper is framed by two controversial issues regarding ethics in the academy: the use of the concept of professionalism in the reemergence of the concept of academic professionalism, and the question of the role of the faculty advisor in the disciplinary process of college and university students. In my experience, 4.5 (admittedly on top of some sand) is pretty similar to 3.5, although sometimes I find that 3.5 can get my foot in a little more easily on the bigger rocks. 6.5 is very similar to 4.5, and 7.0 is very similar to 6.5. I don't have furlongs in my sand, but I think the conditions would be similar. If you're climbing 5.6 at 4.5, I'd put more weight on the lead foot, or maybe take a divot in the other one to get a little more power under you. I know that in terms of furlongs (or meters) sand is considered soft and is more like climbing over sticky clay, but it is usually dense enough to not allow much of the pad to move freely, so it still feels like hard climbing. In other words, I don't think the sand is very sticky, but the weight prevents the pad from moving around. I've used a 7 on sand in some steep waterfalls without any trouble, so I'd consider that a 6. There might be some features that you can't move around because of the thickness, but just as you can roll around on hard features and slide by bushes in sand, you can slide around in sand too and still not be too trapped. adriann 01-21-2012 06:53 AM Re: Sand - Is it harder than rock? The trick is not to take off your shoes and slide around
